- Distribution of Educational Kits: Including Lego boxes, ECD Kits, and Recreational Kits to be distributed in the shelters to facilitate the activities.
- Recreational Activities with the children: In a displacement/shelter context, the objectives are: psychosocial relief, routine and structure, safe expression of emotions, reducing tension in crowded shelters and inclusive participation.
- Information sessions aim to raise awareness and equip participants with essential knowledge on key topics, including Prevention of Sexual Exploitation and Abuse (PSEA), promoting safe reporting mechanisms, accountability, and positive community practices.

FLER is a short-term (up to six months) emergency program designed to rapidly support children affected by crises, starting within the first six weeks. It follows a phased recovery approach, beginning with psychosocial stabilization and gradually transitioning children back into structured learning pathways.

The intervention is built around five key recovery principles: safety, emotional regulation, social connectedness, self-efficacy, and hope. These are delivered through integrated components including psychosocial support sessions (CBPSS), recreational and creative activities, life-saving awareness messages, social-emotional learning programs, basic literacy and numeracy support, and engagement with caregivers and communities to reinforce protective environments for children.

Women, children, and persons with disabilities are disproportionately affected by displacement and economic hardship. Many displaced families are living on the streets or in overcrowded conditions, with limited access to sanitation facilities and food. Children, in particular, face heightened protection risks, including child labor, school dropout, and psychosocial distress due to exposure to violence and instability. The Bourj Hammoud Drop-In Center serves as a critical community hub, where vulnerable individuals can access essential services in a safe and dignified environment, including hygiene facilities, hygiene kits, and hygiene awareness sessions.
